Chicheley 01:19, 29 June 2006 (UTC)reply 2449e79970 The article has these issues: 1) the subject is not notable; 2) the article reads more like a whitepaper or concept discussion rather than anything meriting an encyclopedia entry—at most, the topics discussed could be integrated into other existing, notable articles; 3) it is fundamentally a promotion piece. —Ryanaxp (talk) 16:35, 10 May 2022 (UTC)reply 2449e79970 The information in this article should be incorporated as a subheading under the article of the document that defines it—IPCC Fourth Assessment Report. The result of the debate was No consensus. Avi 04:59, 4 July 2006 (UTC)reply 2449e79970 The IPCC Fourth Assessment Report isn't the document that defines it. IPCC reports are secondary/tertiary documents that summarize previously published research. That's how the IPCC works. The fact that the IPCC discusses a concept means that the concept was already defined and used in other sources. The IPCC happens to be the most authoritative source on climate change so it's frequently named by other documents that discuss co-benefits of climate change mitigation. Delete per nom. Lists are not encyclopedic unless they are a necessary part of an article (to better explain or describe the significance of the article or to contribute to a greater understanding of the article). This list does not do anything to help better understand the main subject matter or the significance of the subject, especially if the articles are non-existent. Most law enforcement agencies merit an article and this is one area that editors have not gotten around to yet so the article will appear. While I would rather use categories, there are some cases when using a list is simply better. In my mind this is one of those cases. You should read osmosis first. You can think of a cell as a semi-permeable membrane separating the "inside" of the cell from the "outside" world. In the "inside", there is a high concentration of sodium and a low concentration of potassium, which is the exact opposite of what's generally on the "outside". It is the concentration of sodium that you are concerned with when you talk about "salt". 2449e79970 Keep being worth billions or maybe trillions of dollars and many many lives the subject is notable.
