You never said it would be easy, but you were stronger than any lie, you are bigger than any challenge. Fulfilling our dreams made you invincible. Nobody notices your pain, nobody sees your tears. Your heart beats in silence and somebody finally somebody heard it. You believed in me and taught me not to give up, to fight for what I want, to fall. And to always get back up with more strength. Who else can give their life for a promise? == # == 22e5b760d6 == Paternal and maternal genes == 22e5b760d6 Human cells have 46 chromosomes that can be divided into 23 homologous chromosome pairs (a maternal and a paternal copy of each chromosome). My question: is that means the maternal and paternal chromosomes are completely seperate from each other or is it mixed. For example if we assumed that both the eye color gene and the hair color gene are both on the chromosome pair number 5, is it always that the maternal copy of both genes are in one chromosome and the paternal copy in the other chromosome (i.e. separate) or it is possible that one chromosome contain a paternal eye color gene and a maternal hair color gene (i.e. mixed).
