Since these antibodies are produced as a delayed antibody reaction to the above-mentioned bacteria, there is no normal value. The presence... 0df9170b27

Anti-streptolysin O In most cases, penicillin is used to treat patients with increased levels of ASO titre Anti-streptolysin O (ASO or ASLO) is the antibody made against streptolysin O, an immunogenic, oxygen-labile streptococcal hemolytic exotoxin produced by most strains of group A and many strains of groups C and G Streptococcus bacteria. ASO titre in the blood could cause damage to the heart and joints. The "O" in the name stands for oxygen-labile; the other related toxin being oxygen-stable streptolysin-S. The main function of streptolysin O is to cause hemolysis (the breaking open of red blood cells)—in particular, beta-hemolysis 0df9170b27

Increased levels of ASO titre in the blood could cause damage to the heart and joints. In most cases, penicillin is used to treat patients with increased levels of ASO titre. 0df9170b27 == Clinical significance == 0df9170b27 When the body is infected with streptococci, it produces antibodies against the various antigens that the streptococci produce. ASO is one such antibody. A raised or rising levels can indicate past or present infection. Historically it was one of the first bacterial markers used for diagnosis and follow up of rheumatic fever or scarlet fever. Its importance in this regard has not diminished. 0df9170b27
