I am toying with buying a whole Jamón ibérico imported from Spain (I am in the U.S.) at a significant price. I already buy it in NYC from specialty stores and figure I will actually save money and have a better product, if I use it all and don't waste it. At what I project for "usage" (eating! but this is not something you eat large amounts of at one time), the whole ham should last, at the least, about two months. For the pre-sliced, it goes in the fridge, like any other cold cut. This is cured food, aged for 24 months, though in a controlled way. I'm not at all sure throwing it in the fridge would work (I mean, I assume it would "work" to keep it from spoiling in the interior; I mean compromising it). Can I just wrap it in some way (how?) and hang it from a hook in the kitchen, which is normal room temperature? Should I maybe wait until the winter, and store it in my garage which is not heated but never gets below freezing. Anyone with any experience who can give me some hands-on knowledge about this? 67.244.114.239 (talk) 21:16, 16 September 2017 (UTC) df3db90782 == consumption of electricity by refrigerator == df3db90782 == Plot, setting and structure == df3db90782 When it came into existence – on 30 September 1967 – Radio 4 inherited a great many continuing programme series which had been initiated prior to that date by its predecessor, the BBC Home Service (1939–1967), and in some cases even by stations which had preceded the Home Service.
