Future planning for disability care The population of older parents who have children with a learning disability is growing and many of their children are likely to outlive them. The consequences of not supporting these family carers will lead to crisis management, increase in distress and care giving burdens, and increased spending on unsuitable crisis placements. This trend is set to continue in England. Demographic changes and the health needs of these two growing populations must be considered against government policy constraints and limited in-home and external care options in order to avoid a crisis. In many cases the caring role can span up to seven decades, ending only with their death. placements and intentional community. Governments and other service providers cannot ignore the pressing needs of this population and their parent and sibling carers. Disability Living Allowance (DLA) or Personal Independence Payment (PIP) is paid at different rates depending on how a disability For many elderly carers of a relative who has a learning or other disability, future planning is an issue.
