Fourth-generation fighter Third-generation fighters were often designed primarily as interceptors, being built around speed and air-to-air missiles.

Fourth-generation designs are heavily influenced by lessons learned from the previous generation of combat aircraft. Fourth-generation The fourth-generation fighter is a class of jet fighters in service from around 1980 to the present, and represents design concepts of the 1970s. Meanwhile, the growing costs of military aircraft in general and the demonstrated success of aircraft such as the McDonnell Douglas F-4 Phantom II gave rise to the popularity of multirole combat aircraft in parallel with the advances marking the so-called fourth. fourth-generation fighter is a class of jet fighters in service from around 1980 to the present, and represents design concepts of the 1970s. While exceptionally fast in a straight line, many third-generation fighters severely lacked in maneuverability, as doctrine held that traditional dogfighting would be impossible at supersonic speeds. In practice, air-to-air missiles of the time, despite being responsible for the vast majority of air-to-air victories, were relatively unreliable, and combat would quickly become subsonic and close-range. This would leave third-generation fighters vulnerable and ill-equipped, renewing an interest in manoeuvrability for the fourth generation of fighters
