In many countries, the part of the year when DST is observed is much longer than the part aligned to standard time. The practice of DST was first tested and widely adopted in the early 20th century, since which many countries have abandoned DST partially or entirely. The season produced twenty-one tropical depressions. All but one further intensified into tropical storms and nine further intensified to become hurricanes. Despite this level of activity, only one hurricane, Raymond, strengthened into a major hurricane. During the season, five named storms made landfall in Mexico: hurricanes Barbara and Manuel, along with tropical storms Juliette, Octave, and Sonia.
