The different names for the dish derive from the combinations of the word uppu, meaning salt in Dravidian languages and mavu meaning ground grain meal. In Maharashtra, the dish traditionally had the name saanjai in Marathi, among other denominations. In North India, where the dish is of more recent introduction, it is called upma.

Uchchhishta saliva. In a broader sense, it refers to the contamination of a food or hand that has come in contact with saliva or the inside of the mouth. Uchchhishta frequently denotes the food scraps remaining after a person has eaten. A person can become purified by washing their hand (Hindus traditionally eat with their fingers) and mouth. Though the term has various meanings and has no exact parallel in English, it is generally translated in English as "leftovers" or "leavings", but with a denigratory aspect. Uchchhishta food, people and utensils are considered to be ritually impure. Though the term has various meanings and has no exact parallel in English, it is generally translated in English as "leftovers" or "leavings"; Uchchhishta (Sanskrit: उच्छिष्ट, IAST: Ucchiṣṭa, pronounced [ʊtːɕʰɪʂt̪ə]), known by various regional terms, is an Indian and a Hindu concept related to the contamination of food by saliva. A person or plate is said to be uchchhishta after coming into contact with uchchhishta food

Milk skin The strong thickness of the skin varies dependent on a number of factors, including the temperature of the milk, the shape of the container, and the amount of milk in the container. Milk skin, or the lactoderm can be produced both through conventional boiling and by microwaving the liquid, and as such can often be observed when heating milk for use in drinks such as drinking chocolate. the amount of milk in the container. When milk is boiled, soluble milk proteins are denatured and then coagulate with milk's fat and form a sticky film Milk skin or lactoderm is a sticky film of protein that forms on top of dairy milk and foods containing dairy milk (such as hot chocolate and some soups). It is caused by the denaturation of proteins such as beta-lactoglobulin (whey protein) 9175ac2900

When milk is boiled, soluble milk proteins are denatured and then coagulate with milk's fat and form a sticky film across the top of the liquid, which then dries by evaporation. The layer does not need to be discarded and can be consumed, as protein's nutritional value is unaffected by the denaturation process. Milk film is often considered to be desirable and is used in several recipes for various foods.
