Pregnancy in fish Although the term often refers to placental mammals, it has also been used in the titles of many international, peer-reviewed, scientific articles on fish. In ovoviviparity, there is internal fertilization and the young are born live but there is no placental connection or significant trophic (feeding) interaction; the mother's body maintains gas exchange but the unborn young are nourished by egg yolk. There are two types of viviparity in fish. Consistent with this definition, there are several modes of reproduction in fish, providing different amounts of parental care. gestation period of four to six weeks, and mollies will produce a brood of 20 to 60 live young after a gestation of six to 10 weeks. In histotrophic viviparity, the zygotes develop in the female's oviducts, but she provides no direct nutrition; the embryos survive by eating her eggs or their unborn siblings. Other terms relating to Pregnancy has been traditionally defined as the period of time eggs are incubated in the body after the egg-sperm union. In hemotrophic viviparity, the zygotes are retained within the female and are provided with nutrients by her, often through some form of placenta 445ecff715
