Initially dismissed as a minor artistic form, chicha art was viewed through a racist lens as huachafa and inferior. In the late 2010s, a new generation, many of them children of immigrants who now form part of the middle class, revalued Cholo and Chicha culture. This shift appeared in both music, with groups like Dengue Dengue Dengue! and Bareto, and in graphic art, with artists... d783b11c29 == Style and themes == d783b11c29 Speakers of both Guarani and Spanish typically employ a great deal of code-switching between the two languages, hence why the blending of the two languages is called "Jopara", meaning 'mixture'. The relative amount of Guaraní or Spanish used in speech varies depending upon the birth of the speakers, the place where they speak, with whom they are speaking, the topic of discussion, and how they want their meaning to be interpreted. Generally, the rural and older population tends to use more Guaraní, while the urban and younger population uses more Spanish—the rural and older population understands more Guaraní and the urban and younger more Spanish. General and everyday conversation is often suited to Guaraní, while technical and specific or formal conversation is often suited for Spanish. d783b11c29

Like the other stories in Los que se van, the narrative is written in a colloquial and raw language and focuses on the lives of montubio and cholo characters from rural coastal Ecuador. Some academic interpretations identify in the story elements that foreshadow what would later become the Latin American artistic movement of magical realism. Since 1992, under the Paraguay's Ministry of Education and Culture (MEC) Act, Guaraní... The collection contains 24 short stories depicting the lives of coastal Ecuadorian peasants. Set in the rural areas of Ecuador's coast, the stories explore the daily struggles of characters who represent the montubio and cholo populations, highlighting their poverty and interactions with family and the land. == Plot == The story begins with Nicasio Yagual, the protagonist, attempting to convince a woman to have sex with him. When she refuses, Yagual sets fire to the boat they are on, which allows him to corner her and accomplish his goal. Over the course of his life, Yagual had committed similar acts, such as killing his cousin's father in a machete duel after being forced to marry her due to sexually abusing her, or raping and murdering the wife of the estate owner he worked...

She was found in a closed room. In the next room, they found a bulldog and Doña Luciana's house-maid, Higinia Balaguer Ostalé, both sleeping under the effects of a narcotic drug. d783b11c29 From an early age, Sáenz de Heredia showed an interest in theatre, writing plays in his spare time and staging them during summer holidays with friends in San Lorenzo de El Escorial. He began studying architecture but later left his studies to work in various occupations, while continuing to write stage plays and, after the Spanish Civil War, scripts for musical revues starring Celia Gámez. d783b11c29 José Luis Sáenz de Heredia was the fourth of the seven children born to the Venezuelan Nieves Osío y Espar and the Riojan Ángel Sáenz de Heredia y Suárez-Argudín. He came from an aristocratic family closely connected to politics, as he was a first cousin of José Antonio Primo de Rivera y Sáenz de Heredia, the founder of the Falange, and thus a nephew of General Miguel Primo de Rivera. d783b11c29

The book was published in 1930 by Zea y Paladines in Guayaquil. Upon release, it was met with strong criticism from conservative literary circles, who objected to its crude language and the perceived exaggeration in its narratives. The authors were accused of trying to create international scandal and tarnish the country's image by portraying characters driven by lust, alcohol, or jealousy. d783b11c29 == Early life ==
