Impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on hospitals Health and social systems across the globe are struggling to cope. This has medical consequences for the people served by the hospitals, and it has financial consequences for the hospitals. Health facilities in many places are closing or limiting services. The situation is especially challenging in humanitarian, fragile and low-income country contexts, where health and social systems are already weak. The pandemic also resulted in the imposition of COVID-19 vaccine mandates in places such as California and New York for all public workers, including hospital staff. Many hospitals have scaled back or postponed non-emergency care. Services to provide sexual and reproductive health care risk being sidelined, which will lead to higher maternal mortality and morbidity.
