List of works by Sandro Botticelli a6d07cf62c == Description == a6d07cf62c The painting, thought to have been completed c. 1480, is believed to represent the beauty ideals of Renaissance Florentine high society. The young man's tunic is of a simple, fine quality with a blue color very rare at the time. The work was painted in tempera on poplar wood with a width of 38.9 cm and a height of 58.7 cm. The figure of the bearded saint in the trecento medallion was added after the portrait was completed and is believed to be an original by Bartolomeo Bulgarini, also known as the "Ovile Master". The medallion is very similar to other works by Bulgarini with a presumption that it was originally trimmed from a rectangular trecento. regarded it as Raphael's self-portrait. The facial features are perceived by specialists as compatible with, if not clearly identical to, the only undoubted self-portrait by Raphael in his fresco The School of Athens at the Vatican, identified as such by Vasari. If it is a self-portrait, no hint is given of Raphael's profession; the portrait shows a richly dressed and "confidently poised" young man. a6d07cf62c

Portrait of a Young Man with a Book (Bronzino) Bronzino worked as court artist for Cosimo I de' Medici where he became the leading portrait painter in Florence. This painting has many interpretations as it is unclear who the sitter is exactly. Bronzino's style of portraits transitioned from more natural to idealized instead, and this shift is evident in the composition of Portrait of a Young Man with a Book, which depicts a young man with his fingers placed inside of a book. The painting was commissioned by the powerful Florentine family, the Medici. After its creation, it was owned amongst various aristocrats and art collectors until it entered the collection at the Metropolitan Museum of Art 1929. Infrared reflectology reveals that Bronzino deliberately made changes to achieve his goals for the portrait.
