It lives in a variety of habitats, including temperate rainforests, coniferous forests, montane riparian zones, sagebrush plains, red fir forests, semiarid sagebrush, cheatgrass plains, and alpine meadows along the rocky shores of mountain lakes. It lives in slow-moving streams, ponds, and lakes during its aquatic breeding phase. The long-toed salamander hibernates during the cold winter months, surviving on energy reserves stored in the skin and tail.

The blade is positioned at roughly a 135° angle from the axis of the shaft, giving the stick a partly "L"-shaped appearance. Stick dimensions can vary widely, as they are usually built to suit a particular player's size and preference. Ice hockey sticks are approximately 150–200 cm
