

Fade To The Black

Wolfe's right-hand man and amanuensis Archie Goodwin is attending a Super Bowl party thrown by his good friend Lily Rowan at her East Side penthouse in Manhattan. During the game, there is a spectacular commercial involving parachutists, acrobats, and more promoting a cherry-flavored soft drink call Cherr-o-kee. One of the partners of the ad agency that produced the commercial, Rod Mills, is also at the party and takes Goodwin aside to say that he'd like help with a problem.

The following musicians are credited with an appearance in the film:

Eric Binford is a chain smoking, socially awkward and unlikeable young man who is also an obsessed film addict. His love of old films extends far beyond his job at a Los Angeles film distributor's warehouse and endless late-night film screenings in his bedroom. For his vast knowledge, Eric has been bullied by his coworkers and family. His singular obsession eventually turns into psychosis after he crosses paths with Marilyn O'Connor, an Australian model and Marilyn Monroe lookalike who becomes the physical embodiment of his cinematic desires.
