Following the popularity of Erik Satie's furniture music, and the ambient music of John Cage and Brian Eno in the 1970s in Japan, the genre grew in popularity. Doran cited the use of natural sounds in traditional Japanese music and meditation as an affinity with Satie's music. Much of the album's music was recorded during the Japanese asset price bubble and sponsored by various corporations. Ambient music Bearing elements associated with new-age music, instruments such as the piano, strings and flute may be emulated through a synthesizer. The genre evokes an "atmospheric", "visual", or "unobtrusive" quality. Nature soundscapes may be included, and some works use sustained or repeated notes, as in drone music. Often "peaceful" sounding and lacking composition, beat, and/or structured melody, ambient music uses textural layers of sound that can reward both passive and active listening, and encourage a sense of calm or contemplation.
