LGBTQ people in Argentina One of the main conflicts encountered by LGBT history researchers is the use of modern concepts that were non-existent to people from the past, such as "homosexual", "transgender" and "travesti", falling into an anachronism. It is particularly difficult to find information on the incidence of homosexuality in societies from Hispanic America as a result of the anti-homosexual taboo derived from Christian morality, so most of the historical sources of its existence are found in acts of repression and punishment. Karina Urbina y el activismo transexual de los años 90" (in Spanish). "KA-BUUM" (in Spanish). Retrieved June 15, 2021. LGBT in Argentina refers to the diversity of practices, militancies and cultural assessments on sexual diversity that were historically deployed in the territory that is currently the Argentine Republic. Non-heterosexuality was historically characterized as a public enemy: when power was exercised by the Catholic Church, it was regarded as a sin; during the late 19th and early 20th centuries, when it was in the hands of positivist thought, it was viewed as a disease; and later, with the advent of civil society, it became a crime. Rompetechos is stubborn, short, short-sighted and clueless, his name (rompetechos means “ceiling breaker”) being an irony for his short height. The strips are 1 to 4 pages long and tell the life of this character and the funny situations that occur caused by his lack of vision. b5f71434a4 Urbina first presented herself to a court requesting the legal recognition of her female identity on 25 March 1982. In June 1989, the Civil Court of the Federal Capital formally ruled against her request. In December 1989, Urbina filed a complaint against that ruling before the Supreme Court. That same year, she presented a bill to Alberto Pierri, a member of the Justicialist Party and then-President of the Chamber of Deputies, that would see the laws regarding changing gender identity established; though she never received a response.

Established in the early 1960s as an AM station on 1560 kHz, today's XHINFO has had a turbulent history. In the 2000s, an agreement by longtime owner Grupo Radio Centro to spin the station off to José Gutiérrez Vivó, host of the Monitor newscast, ended in a split and years of lawsuits that dragged the station off the air. However, a sale to Henkel, who had been a creditor, led to an interim operation through most of the 2010s. In 2017, XEINFO-AM won the only slot for a commercial Mexico City station to migrate to FM and began FM broadcasting the next year under an agreement with a company that programmed the station as "Aire Libre" with an indie and eclectic music format. A further dispute between the two parties led to Aire Libre being forced off the air in late 2021. Three different formats have aired on the station since the Aire Libre dispute.

Travesti (gender identity) Other terms have been invented and are used in South America in an attempt to further distinguish it from cross-dressing, drag, and pathologizing connotations. Retrieved June Common in Latin America, the Portuguese and Spanish-language term travesti (Spanish pronunciation: [tra'βesti]; Portuguese pronunciation: [traves'tʃi]) can either be used synonymously with the English transgender, or used to specifically designate people who were assigned male at birth and develop a feminine gender identity. In Spain, the term was used in a similar way during the Franco era, but it was replaced with the advent of the medical model of transsexuality in the late 1980s and early 1990s, in order to rule out negative stereotypes.
