Charlie Gardiner (ice hockey) A few months after winning the Cup, Gardiner died from a brain hemorrhage brought on by a tonsillar infection. Born in Edinburgh, Scotland, Gardiner moved with his family to Canada as a child. In 1934, Gardiner became the only NHL goaltender to captain his team to a Stanley Cup win. However, when Gardiner woke up on the train in the morning, he had trouble seeing, as Charles Robert Gardiner (December 31, 1904 – June 13, 1934) was a Canadian professional ice hockey player who was a goaltender for the Chicago Black Hawks in the National Hockey League. He played seven seasons with Chicago, winning two Vezina Trophies for allowing the fewest goals, was named to the First All-Star Team three times and Second All-Star Team once in recognition as one of the best goalies in the league. Gardiner lied to Gorman and insisted it was only a minor headache. When the Hockey Hall of Fame was established in 1945, Gardiner was named one of the inaugural inductees. Playing all of his junior hockey in or around Winnipeg, Manitoba, Gardiner joined the Black

The race was plagued with accidents. The first major incident came when Stefan Johansson hit a deer with his McLaren MP4/3 after it wandered onto the circuit during Friday practice. The terrified deer was crossing the track to seek refuge from the noise of the cars when it was struck by Johansson traveling at close to 140 mph (225 km/h), killing it instantly. The McLaren left front suspension was broken in the impact causing it to spear off into the guardrail...

Brad Honeycutt, author
The Shepard elephant, also known as l'egs-istential quandary or the impossible elephant, is a perceptual illusion, of the type impossible object, based on figure-ground confusion. Parts of the object (in this case the elephant's legs)
become the background, and vice versa. As its creator Roger Shepard explains: The elephant...belongs to a class of objects that are truly impossible in that the object itself cannot be globally segregated from the nonobject or background. based on a

"Drinking in L.A." was featured in television commercials for Rolling Rock beer in the United Kingdom, which contributed to its chart success there, peaking at number three on the UK Singles Chart in August 1999. It also reached the top 10 in Iceland, Italy, Norway and Sweden, as well as number 35 in the band's native Canada. The music video for the song was directed by Adam Courneya. The song appeared in the 2022 film Aftersun. d1d96e2665 Iranian-born but living in the West since college, Bahari is in Iran to cover the 2009 presidential election and staying with his elderly mother in Tehran. He witnesses the massive support, enthusiasm and optimism of the reformist presidential campaign; the outrage and protest of reformist voters after the election results shows their candidate(s) losing by an improbably large margin; and the often brutal crackdown of the regime against the protesters and sometimes innocent bystanders.
