Bart made his television debut in the short "Good Night" on The Tracey Ullman Show on April 19, 1987. Cartoonist Matt Groening created and designed Bart while waiting in the lobby of James L. Brooks's office. Initially called to pitch a series of shorts based on his comic strip Life in Hell, Groening developed a new set of characters. Unlike the other Simpson family members, who were named after Groening's relatives, Bart's name is an anagram of brat. After two years on The Tracey Ullman Show, the Simpson family received their own series, which premiered on Fox on December 17, 1989. Bart has appeared in every episode of The Simpsons except "Four Great Women and a Manicure".

Throughout the 1980s, several prominent filmmakers and industry personalities in the United States, such as Frank Capra and Martin Scorsese, advocated for Congress to enact a film preservation bill in order to avoid commercial modifications (such as pan and scan and editing for television) of classic films, which they saw as negative. In response to the controversy over the colorization of originally black and white films in the decade specifically, Representatives Robert J. Mrazek and Sidney R. Yates introduced the National Film Preservation Act of 1988, which established the National Film Registry, its purpose, and the criteria for selecting films for preservation. The Act was passed and the NFR's mission was subsequently reauthorized by further acts of Congress in 1992, 1996, 2005, 2008 and 2016. Hi, Freewayguy. Unfortunately, no, nobody gets paid to edit Wikipedia...not even administrators, bureaucrats, or stewards. I think that probably the best thing you could do to help improve your chances of becoming an administrator is to work on improving your language skills. I understand that you're not a native English speaker, and it's not the easiest language to pick up. However, part of being an administrator is being able to communicate clearly with other users. Being able to do so is vital so you can convey why you needed to protect a page or block a user. If another administrator doesn't understand why you made an admin action, they might overturn that action. Better English can help your mainspace... b7418e0d9a
