Food web Position in the. A food web is the natural interconnection of food chains and a graphical representation of what-eats-what in an ecological community

Food chain A food chain illustrates the associations between organisms according to the energy sources they consume in trophic levels, and the most common way to quantify them is in length: the number of links between a trophic consumer and the base of the chain. A food chain is a linear network of links in a food web, often beginning with an autotroph (such as grass or algae), also called a producer, and typically A food chain is a linear network of links in a food web, often beginning with an autotroph (such as grass or algae), also called a producer, and typically ending at an apex predator (such as grizzly bears or killer whales), detritivore (such as earthworms and woodlice), or decomposer (such as fungi or bacteria). A food web is distinct from a food chain

Chain moray Echidna catenata, commonly known as the chain moray, is a moray eel found in shallow parts of the western Atlantic Ocean and from islands elsewhere in the Atlantic

Stability of the food chain is crucial for survival of most species. Removing even one component from the food chain could result in extinction or significant decreases in a species' probability of surviving. Many food chains and food webs contain a keystone species, a species that could directly affect the food chain and has a significant impact on the environment. The absence of a keystone species could destroy the balance of the entire food chain.

Fishing down the food web on the food chain. The article establishes the importance of the mean trophic level of fisheries as a tool for measuring the health of ocean ecosystems

Marine food web A marine food web is a food web of marine life. At the base of the ocean food web are single-celled algae and other plant-like organisms known as phytoplankton

The efficiency of a food chain depends on the energy first consumed by the...
