Tree height measurement If the tree is growing on the side of a cliff, the base of the tree is at the point where the pith would intersect the cliff side. It is not the same as the length of the trunk. Tree height can be measured in a number of ways with varying degrees of accuracy. Tree height is the vertical distance between the base of the tree and the tip of the highest branch on the tree, and is difficult to measure accurately Tree height is the vertical distance between the base of the tree and the tip of the highest branch on the tree, and is difficult to measure accurately. On a slope this base point is considered as halfway between the ground level at the upper and lower sides of the tree. If a tree is leaning, the trunk length may be greater than the height of the tree. Roots extending down from that point would not add to the height of the tree. The base of the tree is where the projection of the pith (center) of the tree intersects the existing supporting surface upon which the tree is growing or where the seed sprouted

These operations when designed for a self-balancing binary search tree, contain precautionary measures against boundlessly increasing tree height, so that these abstract data structures receive the attribute "self-balancing".
