Nervous system Nerves that In biology, the nervous system is the highly complex part of an animal that coordinates its actions and sensory information by transmitting signals to and from different parts of its body. The nervous system detects environmental changes that impact the body, then works in tandem with the endocrine system to respond to such events. Nervous tissue first arose in wormlike organisms about 550 to 600 million years ago. The PNS is divided into two separate subsystems, the somatic and autonomic nervous systems. The CNS consists of the brain and spinal cord. The autonomic nervous system is further subdivided into the sympathetic, parasympathetic and enteric nervous systems. Nerves that transmit signals from the brain are called motor nerves (efferent), while those nerves that transmit information from the body to the CNS are called sensory nerves (afferent). In vertebrates, it consists of two main parts, the central nervous system (CNS) and the peripheral nervous system (PNS). PNS consists mainly of nerves, which are enclosed bundles of long fibers, or axons, that connect the CNS to every other part of the body.

Thatching By contrast, in some developed countries it is the choice of some affluent people who desire a rustic look for their home, would like a more ecologically friendly roof, or who have purchased an originally thatched abode. It is a very old roofing method and has been used in both tropical and temperate climates. In most of England, thatch remained the only roofing material available to the bulk of the population in the countryside Thatching is the craft of building a roof with dry vegetation such as straw, water reed, sedge (Cladium mariscus), rushes, heather, or palm branches, layering the vegetation so as to shed water away from the inner roof. Thatch is still employed by builders in developing countries, usually with low-cost local vegetation. permanent houses with wooden shingles. Since the bulk of the vegetation stays dry and is
