Armatrading was inspired to write "Barefoot and Pregnant" based on a conversation she had with her agent about a relationship he knew where the man was possessive. He would restrict his partner's freedom by repeatedly getting her pregnant and tried to ensure she would stay by giving her all the material things she wanted. Armatrading titled the song after the figure of speech, which she had never heard before until her agent used it during their conversation. Armatrading told Beat Instrumental in 1978, "'Barefoot and Pregnant' came out of conversation and that line – it's a great line. I was talking with my agent about wealth and [he] said that some men, when they have really beautiful women, like to keep that beauty to themselves. They put her in the best house, high up on the hill, where she's got everything around her. They keep her... 7c557c1e3a
