Push polls may rely on innuendo, or information gleaned from opposition research on the political opponent of the interests behind the poll. In a push poll, large numbers of voters are contacted with little effort made to collect and analyze their response data 8bfd85af2a

Push-up Push-ups are a repetitive basic exercise used in civilian athletic training or physical education and commonly in military physical training. By raising and lowering the body using the arms while using the legs as support, push-ups exercise the pectoral muscles, triceps, and anterior deltoids, with ancillary benefits to the rest of the deltoids, serratus anterior, coracobrachialis, and the midsection as a whole. The push-up (press-up in British English) is a common calisthenics exercise beginning from the prone position. Variations, such as wide-arm and diamond push-ups, target specific muscle groups and provide further challenges. It is also a common form of punishment used in the military, school sport, and some martial arts disciplines for its humiliating factor (when one fails to do a specified amount) and for its lack of equipment. Generally, push polls are viewed as a form of negative campaigning. Indeed, the term is commonly (and confusingly) used in a broader sense to refer to legitimate polls that aim to test negative political messages. Future usage of the term will determine whether the strict or broad definition becomes the most favored, but in all such polls, the pollster asks leading questions or suggestive questions that "push" the interviewee toward adopting an unfavourable response toward the political candidate or issue in question. 8bfd85af2a == General use == 8bfd85af2a Under certain conditions, such as restrictive security policies that block incoming HTTP requests, push technology is sometimes simulated using a technique called polling. In these cases, the client periodically checks with the server to see if new information is available, rather than receiving automatic updates. 8bfd85af2a
