number, range number, section number, and portion of a section. Sections are customarily surveyed into smaller squares by repeated halving and quartering. A quarter section is 160 acres (65 ha) and a "quarter-quarter section" is 40 acres (16 ha). In 1832 the smallest area of land that could be acquired was reduced to the 40-acre (16 ha) quarter-quarter section, and this size parcel became entrenched in American mythology. After the Civil War, freedmen (freed slaves) were reckoned to be self-sufficient with "40 acres and a mule," though they never received it. In the 20th century real estate developers preferred working with 40-acre (16 ha) parcels. The phrases "front 40" and "back 40," referring to farm fields, indicate the front and back quarter-quarter sections of land.

The region of Acre possessed rich gold deposits and an abundance of timber, principally rubber trees. From the end of the 19th century until the middle of the 20th century, rubber trees were crucial to the automobile and transport industry, as synthetic rubber for manufacturing tires and other objects was not discovered until around World War II. It is because of this that the war is also referred to as the Rubber War (Guerra del Caucho), for one of the motives that drove Jefferson José Torres, Governor of Amazonas, was a rubber export tax. The average elevation in this woreda is around 404 meters (1325 feet) above sea level; the highest peak is Mount Dama Ali (1068 meters or 3504 feet). The only perennial river is the Awash, which passes through Lake Afambo, and a chain of lakes south and east of it: Litali, Gummare, Bario, and Lake Abbe. As of 2008, Afambo has 79 kilometers (49 miles) of all-weather gravel road; around 22.33% of the total population has access to drinking water.

Acre War yielded an approximate area of 191,000 square kilometers, which mainly corresponds to the current state of Acre, Brazil. The outcome also affected territories disputed with Peru. [citation needed] Tambs, Lewis The Acre War, known in Brazil as Acrean Revolution (Portuguese: Revolução Acreana) and in Spanish as Guerra del Acre ("War of the Acre") was a border conflict between Bolivia and the First Brazilian Republic over the Acre Region, which was rich in rubber and gold deposits. The conflict had two phases between 1899 and 1903, and ended with an Acrean victory and the subsequent Treaty of Petrópolis, which ceded Acre to Brazil 413b58ff9e
