Nothing Nothing, no-thing, or no thing is the complete absence of anything, as the opposite of something and an antithesis of everything. Aristotle took the view that there exists matter and there exists space, a receptacle into which matter objects can be placed. Early Greek philosophers argued that it was impossible for nothing to "exist". The atomists allowed nothing but only in the spaces between the invisibly small atoms. This became the paradigm for classical scientists of the modern age, like Isaac Newton. The concept of nothing has been a matter of philosophical debate since at least the 5th century BCE. For them, all space was filled with atoms. The concept of nothing has Nothing, no-thing, or no thing is the complete absence of anything, as the opposite of something and an antithesis of everything. Nevertheless, some philosophers, like René Descartes, continued to argue against the existence of empty space until the scientific discovery of a physical vacuum

Playboy had a foldout of a beautiful woman in each issue, and Life Magazine had these large, striking foldouts in which they'd show how the earth began or the solar system or something on that order -- some massive panorama. Many magazines were hopping on the bandwagon, offering similar full-color spreads to their readers. I noticed this and thought, what's a good satirical comment on the trend? Then I figured, why not reverse it? If other magazines are doing these big, full-color foldouts, well, cheap old Mad should go completely the opposite way and

James' central argument in "The Will to Believe" hinges on the idea that access to the evidence for whether certain beliefs are true depends crucially upon first adopting those beliefs without evidence. As an example, James argues that it can be rational to have unsupported faith in one's own ability to accomplish tasks that require confidence. Importantly, James points out that this is the case even for pursuing scientific inquiry. James then argues that like belief in one's own ability to accomplish a difficult task, religious faith can... f1fa88cb5c
